

I was glad that a Google search resulted in some very limited information about me. Literally, there were only five tidbits of information and most of them were about a professional activity. It is good to note that being very selective on what I post and who I interact with has made it possible for me to keep my privacy. Others might see very little about me online – even on social media I try to be careful. I think my digital footprint is small.

